Vulnerability and the Courage to Be Seen

No Armor Tonight

For a short window, set down joke-as-cover, defense, and the impressive answer. One modest topic, spoken plainly.

1. Say the topic in one sentence. Set about 15 minutes, and split it in half.
2. Talk about the feeling. If a joke ducks it, say, "Let me try that plainly," and restate one sentence. Your partner does not catch it for you. A delighted laugh may stay.
3. At the half, the listener offers one feeling of their own about what they heard. Not a score of how bare you were.
4. Swap for the same length. End when the timer ends, or sooner. There is no armor score.

A plain sentence is enough. After the timer, the evening may be funny again.

An insult is not unarmored truth. If the topic becomes harm or safety, stop the style game and deal with it directly.

Either of you may end early or trade for a milder topic.
